

The Eternity of living

August 1, 2023

"Life is a journey not a destination."

The end of the each day teaches us something new. Time has its own phases which everyone experience in its lifetime. It all depends on one's perception some are eager to learn more and some tackle things as a chronophagous. Our generation has witnessed the chronicles of time where we have transited from offline to online and we are relishing the taste of virtual things. This virtual reality dragged us so far that we fail to realize the presence of virtual devil among us. The e commerce and hyper local models are just a second away from our reach. With the advancement of so many apps and online platforms in any field we are buckled into a vertex of using them for endless purposes. Families have no bonds together, all members are sitting in their own cozy comfort zones where they hardly bother about the pain and feelings of others. There is no time to express our emotions and daily hardships as we get so sucked into a vertex of using and surfing internet to deal with our problems. Life is such a merry chase where everyone is chasing happiness and has forgotten the support of real supporters in our immediate surroundings.

Driven mostly by the technological progress and global integration, people feel proud to get connected globally and not leaving any stone unturned to settle into the rich developed countries once they succeed in settling down there they started flaunting themselves in a very colorful auto-filtered photos on social media .When they come out of the virtual reality then they realize the fact of life when nobody is there to serve a plate of happiness to them. This entire phrase reminds me the sentence of our famous Punjabi singer Gurdas Mann’s famous song “Ki Banu Duniya Da” where he rightly highlighted the harsh reality of life and urged the people not to forget their traditions under the fancy filtered life of western world– “Harbolisikhosikhni vi chahiyedi, par pakkivekhkekachhi ni dhaayidi.”

Get up! Get up! Get up! For yourself not for the sake of others and find out your own way of living in great Eternity...
